We strive to be a leader in sustainable practices in our business sector.

Allens was the first organisation in Australia to become a signatory to the United Nations Global Compact which sets out universally accepted principles covering human rights, labour, the environment and anti-corruption.

We recognise that our impact is not so much about what we produce but about what we consume, our procurement practices, how we deal with people and the way our offices are managed.

This policy applies to all of our offices in Australia and in Asia. Allens will continue to comply with the Global Compact and in particular will:

- monitor and assess our greenhouse gas emissions annually, and seek to minimise them;
- eliminate avoidable business travel;
- minimise the consumption of energy and water;
- reduce our paper use;
- use resources efficiently and minimise the generation of waste; and
- work with our suppliers to reduce our indirect environmental and human rights impacts and encourage a reduction in their impact.

We will strive for continuous improvement by monitoring performance against targets and ensuring future corporate strategies align with our values and our commitment.
